? HOW

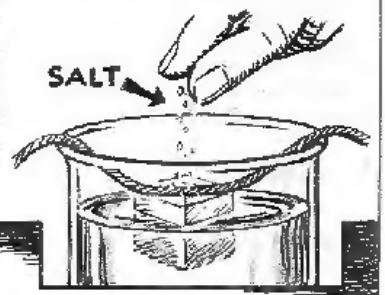
How was "The Temple" in London first used?

'THE TEMPLE' is the site between Fleet Street and the River Thames, formerly occupied by the buildings of the Knights Templar. These were originally nine French knights who bound themselves at the beginning of the 12th century to protect Pilgrims on their way to the Holy Land. They were given the name Templars because their arms were kept in a building on the site of the old Temple of Solomon at Jerusalem. They themselves preferred to be called 'The Poor Soldiers of the Holy City'. Their habit was long and white with a red cross on the shoulder.

Later the Order became very wealthy and corrupt and so powerful that it had to be suppressed in 1312. The Knights also had a meeting place in Somerset, hence the name of Templecombe, a village in Somerset.

How can you lift up an ice cube with a piece of string?

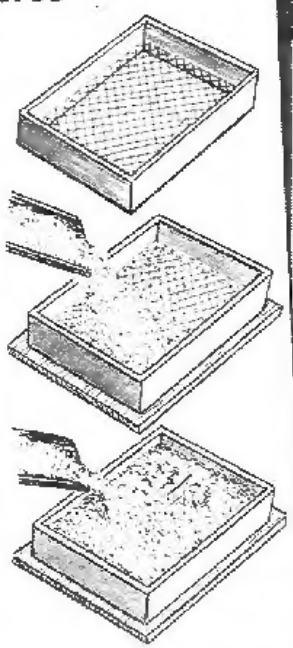
FLOAT an ice cube in a beaker of water, lay a piece of string across the beaker so that it is on top of the ice cube. Sprinkle some salt on top of the ice and it will begin to melt as the salt water mixture has a lower freezing point. In melting, the ice will take in heat from the surrounding water which will refreeze around the string. After a minute or so you can lift up the string with the ice cube firmly attached.



How did England get the nickname of 'Blighty'

THIS is soldiers' slang from the First World War. In Urdu, the language spoken by Mohammedans in India, 'Vilayati' or 'Bilati' means 'provincial' or 'removed at some distance.' Soldiers away from home thus pronounced it 'Blighty' to mean England.

How to preserve flowers and keep their colour



THIS way of preserving flowers is a form of 'mummifying.' In the end you have flowers that look nearly as fresh and colourful as the time you picked them and they will last for months.

Knock the bottom out of a seed box, so that you are left with a frame. Fix some ¼-inch wire mesh across the inside about 1 inch from the bottom of the frame.

Now place the frame on a long piece of wood and put a layer of clean sand in the bottom so that it just covers the mesh. Lay the flowers in the sand, spreading out the petals. Then cover completely with some more sand to the top. The sand must get to all parts of the flower, so fill in any deep blooms.

For the next three weeks put the frame containing the sand and flowers in a warm dry place such as near the kitchen boiler or on a shelf in the greenhouse. When you take the flowers out they will be crisp and dry and can be arranged when you choose without adding any water.

How to knock the bottom of a tower away without knocking it down

YOU need a pile of draughts—about eight and a flat school ruler.

Stand the pile in front of you, take the ruler and bringing it along the table just a fraction above the surface, knock the bottom draught with the side of the ruler. The ruler must hit the draught squarely and then it will knock it away without the rest of the column falling down. You can do this several times and each time the tower gets lower.

The principle behind this is 'Inertia'—the unwillingness of all objects to be moved from their places.
